Message from the Dean of Arts

Research in the Faculty of Arts explores a range of influences on our human existence, helping us to make critical and creative connections between individuals, communities and the world around us. Our faculty members are actively engaged in inspiring research and creative activities that explore theoretical and applied study across the disciplines of humanities and social sciences. We celebrate interdisciplinarity and community-engaged research that challenges and resolves social, cultural, political, economic, environmental and historical issues.

This Research Bulletin reflects only the most recent achievements of our excellent academic colleagues and I welcome you to explore their work to discover the diversity and impact of their scholarly output. You will not be disappointed. Read on to find out what drives us to excellence and continues to attract outstanding students to our programs.

Message from the Editor of the Bulletin

The Faculty of Arts is delighted to present the first annual Research Bulletin for the academic years 2021-2022 and 2022-2023.

The past two academic years remained the years of adjusting to the new ways of conducting and disseminating research, but exactly because of this these years showed the resilience and determination of our researchers to create new knowledge in their fields and across disciplines. Our colleagues continued to share their research results widely in the research community and with community partners, and to collaborate with academic colleagues nationally and internationally. They kept up with the training of graduate students. They secured research funding from national research councils and from international funding bodies, and they also won accolades for their research. Research created by our colleagues attracted government interest, helped local communities and non-profit organizations, expanded the boundaries of knowledge from a range of social, historical, cultural and theoretical approaches to their subjects. Our researchers' work also enriched the heritage sector and the field of creative expression, and it contributed to the resilient debates in the media on some of the most pressing issues of our time.

The quality, number and generic variety of scholarly and creative publications, both in conventional and open-access formats, are the most revealing evidence of the excellence, originality and ingenuity of our researchers. The topics and questions with which our researchers engage are original, complex and inspiring; and for that reason, they show the intellectual curiosity and scholarly vibrancy of our research community. The Faculty of Arts commends its researchers for their resolve and zeal during the years that threatened to stall our creativity and research resilience.

Gorsebrook Research Institute for Atlantic Canada Studies

The Gorsebrook Research Institute (GRI) for Atlantic Canada Studies at Saint Mary's University is the regional hub for research and collaborative scholarship on Atlantic Canada. Our Atlantic Canada recognizes First Nation communities and their land sovereignty, the ethnic and cultural diversity of those who were settled as part of forced immigration and colonization, and those who are here by their own choice and agency.

Its mandate is to provide an interdisciplinary research environment that facilitates exchanges and partnerships among researchers at Saint Mary's University and affiliates from many different fields who can come together to improve understandings of Atlantic Canada. The Board of Directors of GRI is chaired by Dr. S. Karly Kehoe. The day-to-day management of the GRI is overseen by Dr. Kehoe, and Mathias Rodorff, the GRI's Research Manager.

Student Research

The research mission of Saint Mary's University is to engage in research valued by communities here at home and around the world. Cultivating our students' intellectual curiosity and creativity is a vital aspect of this work, at the graduate and undergraduate levels. This happens in many ways throughout the Faculty of Arts, from paid summer research positions to our honours programs, student conferences and hands-on learning in field schools, museum work placements and community outreach projects.

One of our greatest achievements is helping to prepare the next generation of scholars with a foundation for their careers and future studies. Here are just a few examples – for many more, follow our ongoing updates on Instagram, Twitter/X and Facebook.

From Antigua to Mi'kma'ki: Student Francesca Southwell gained valuable experience on research projects with Dr. Trudy Sable and Professor Raymond Sewell. The work included transcribing video interviews and digitizing documents written by Mi'kmaw Elders. "I learned details about different aspects of Mi'kmaw culture that I never would have known from books, from listening to these life stories. It is important for the future generations to come, to preserve this information from those who lived through such historical moments in time," she says.
